AI use policy for [Business]

What we can and can't put into AI tools.

Why we have this

AI tools can save us time. This page sets out how we use them safely, so customer trust and our own information stay protected.

Fine to use AI for

- Drafting emails, posts and replies that a person reviews before sending.
- Summarising our own non-confidential notes, manuals or public information.
- Brainstorming, checklists, outlines and rewording.
- Explaining a topic or a spreadsheet formula.

Never put into AI tools

- Customer names with contact details, addresses, or account numbers.
- Card, bank, payment or ID details of anyone.
- Passwords, access codes or keys.
- Health, legal or HR matters about any person.
- Contracts, pricing or anything we've agreed to keep confidential.

Always

- Use only the tools listed below, with a work account.
- Check facts, figures and names before anything goes out.
- Stay responsible for the final wording; AI drafts, people decide.
- Ask if you're unsure, before you paste.

Questions

Ask [owner or manager name] at [email]. We review this policy every [6 months] on [date].

This is a plain-English starting point, not legal advice. Check local rules and any industry requirements that apply to your business.
